The Arava Institute for Environmental Studies seeks a Coordinator for the Arava Dialogue Forum

Program Description

The Arava Institute aims to create a multi-cultural community of students and alumni that has the tools and understanding necessary to foster environmental sustainability, social justice, and respect in the broader society. This builds on the Arava Institute's belief that the social and political relationships within and between groups in this region have a significant influence on environmental practices, public policies, and grassroots activism. The student body at the Arava Institute is comprised of Jordanians, Palestinians, Israelis, and participants from around the world.

All students and interns at the Arava Institute participate in a weekly dialogue forum, which is facilitated by three co-facilitators. The forum reflects the Institute's mission to generate capacity-building for conciliation and cooperation, even during conflict.

Together, students discuss the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, including its historical roots, the current situation as experienced by both sides, and possible futures. They share personal experiences and family stories from different sides of the conflict, raising universal questions about identity, national ideologies, power and privilege, coexistence, and personal responsibility. In this process, students are challenged to critically examine their own views, cultural values, and understanding of history.
